We have just alluded to the tight skirts. There is something almost shocking about e swathing lines which now so unequivocally reveal the entire figure of a fashenable woman. I have already told you that she has divested herself of every possible morsel of inside drapery, which t is given her to discard, and wears her frocks "neat," to quote a big man-milliner, over combinations or long woven vests which reach to the knee, where they are joined by lace or silk flounces. Of course, this new skirt, fitted as it is, without a single wrinkle over the back, green lawn or velvet-pile carpet, is all very well; but how about the half-attempted, half-accomplished version of the country dressmaker, who just misses the right curves and grows creases in the wrong places? Then indeed the drastic lenouement is obvious. The new dresse n her hands become deeds of disaster

The latter, if they give way, will lie hard, but I rather doubt it. There is an "unctucus rectitude" to adopt Mr. Ce-cil Rhodes' historic phrase, about the royal blues, and purples, and crimsons which has a hold on the public taste.

Some London Innevations. There has been an innovation in the matter of court trains, which, oddly nough, has been deemed of sufficient in portance to be telegraphed from Londor to the daily papers and printed as news The innovation consists in the substitu-tion of diaphanous trains for the heavy velvet ones worn for years. These ap-peared at the last drawing-room at which several Americans were presented. One of these has written us a description of several of these beautiful gowns, which we are sure will interest our readers "A very effective and beautiful black cos tume was that worn by Lady Crossly The dress was all of soft clinging net and shoulders as a counter-balance. A very delicately lovely dress, in a pale shade of pink satin, was worn by Edith Villiers. There was a berthe of chiffon edged with a line of pearls, and the creamy-hued lace sleeves were caught finished with a flounce of satin, headed and edged with a puffing of chiffon. The train was of soft pale pink chiffon over nousseline de soje, and it, as well as the bodice, was charmingly trimmed with rails of shaded roses. But enough of these beautiful creations
